Here she Comes!

All of a sudden, everyone gasps and cheers excitedly, and even the grown-ups frantically wave red, white and blue flags.

“What’s happening Grandad?”

“Her gold coach is coming! Listen! Can you hear the horses’ hooves clattering on the road? Can you hear the fanfare of trumpets – toowoo!”

“No grandad, there’s too much shouting!”

Dad and Grandad lift Tom and Sara onto their shoulders so that they can see the handsome prancing horses, the gold coach glittering like a giant crown in the sunshine, and the smiling Queen waving back at everyone. Ranks of smart soldiers riding silver horses in special red uniforms and wearing plumed helmets lead the way or ride alongside or follow neatly behind.

Grandad whispers, “I was about your age when the Queen got crowned and it was just as spectacular then, all those seventy years ago. I remember it like it was yesterday.”

“Really Grandad?”

“Aye, she looked just like a princess bride, like she was getting married to her new job, so pretty too. Now she’s off to the church again, so everyone can give thanks for her long reign.”

“Is she Queen of everyone?”

“Well, not everyone but she has lots of countries all around the world to share her time with and to think about helping and I’m sure that she thinks about them all the time, talking to them all like friends.”

“If she has lots of friends, she must be going to have a huge party!”

“Mirfield might have its own Jubilee beacon on the Showground! So, well yes, we’re all part of it!”

“Wow, is the Queen going to come to MacDonalds with us?”

“Err, no, there wouldn’t be room for all the horses and soldiers!”

“Grandad, you’re so funny!”
